कविता कोई हवाई चीज़ नहीं है। योगी, वैज्ञानिक अथवा समाजशास्त्री सत्य की खोज करने के लिए जितनी गहरी समाधि लगाता है, उतनी गहरी समाधि लगाए बिना कवि भी सत्य को नहीं पा सकता। किंतु, कवि और वैज्ञानिक के सत्यों में भेद है। विज्ञान स्थूलता की कला है। वह एक चीज़ से दूसरी चीज़ की दूरी मापता है, और हर चीज़ को अपनी काठ की अंगुलियों से छूकर यह बतलाता है कि वह कड़ी या मुलायम है। किंतु, कविता वस्तुओं के सूक्ष्म रूप का मूल्य ढूँढती है। वह उनके उन पक्षों का विश्लेषण करती है, जो गणित की भाषा में व्यक्त नहीं किए जा सकते। और चूँकि बुद्धि भी गणित को छोड़कर और कोई भाषा समझ नहीं सकती; इसलिए, कविता अपने विश्लेषण का परिणाम बुद्धि नहीं, बल्कि हृदय के सामने निवेदित करती है; क्योंकि हृदय उन संकेतों को समझ सकता है, जिनके माध्यम से कवि अदृश्य और अनिर्वचनीय का वर्णन करता है।

स्वामी विवेकानंद ने कहा था कि यूरोप की सभ्यता सर्वथा तिरस्कार की वस्तु नहीं; क्योंकि मैं भी उस ईश्वर में विश्वास करना नहीं चाहता जो मरने के बाद मुझे शांति तो दे सकता है, किंतु जीवन में मुझे रोटी नहीं दे सकता। स्पष्ट ही, स्वामी विवेकानंद भारतीय अध्यात्म का संबंध उस वस्तु के साथ जोड़ना चाहते थे जो हमारे पास नहीं थी- जो शायद, हमारे पूर्वजों के पास भी नहीं थी। उन्होंने धर्म की गोद में ऊँघते हुए भारतवर्ष को जगाने के लिए शंखनाद किया और कहा, कि तुम्हें जीवन में स्पंदन भरने वाली प्रेरणा की ज़रूरत है; तुम्हें शक्ति का वह विद्युत् प्रवाह चाहिए जिससे धरती जवान रहती है और जिससे यूरोप के अंग-अंग में चेतना और स्वास्थ्य का सौंदर्य छलक रहा है।

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

A porcelain Chinese statue of Emperor Kung was being auctioned off to a motley crowd and not-so-serious bidders. In order to grab the bidders' attention, the auctioneer presented a fact sheet about the history of the statue. It said that the statue was brought from a place called Ha Li Chuan in China.

The narrator of the story, seated amidst the bidders, was intrigued by the statue's history. He tried to delve deeper into its history and found that the statue was bought by Sir Alexander Heathcote, a diplomatic person of great acclaim. He also happened to be a very fastidious person. He would have breakfast at the same time every morning, with the same ingredients in the exact same quantity, reach his office desk at the Foreign Office at exactly 8:59 AM and leave for home at exactly 6 in the evening.

In Peking, Sir Alexander once visited the countryside and was delighted to see the beautiful Chinese arts. The craftsman in one of the shops, upon realising his deep interest in Chinese art, showed him a porcelain Chinese statue of Emperor Kung which had been in his family for seven generations. Sir Alexander was sure that the statue must have been made by Pen Q and even calculated that it must have been made during the turn of the 15th century. The only flaw was that the base of the statue was missing.

Alexander Heathcote could not contain his heart's desire and said, "How I wish the piece was mine". Upon seeing his interest, the craftsman, with a heavy heart, fixed a base of his choice on the statue and gifted it to him. It was the Chinese custom to oblige if an honoured guest requested something. To pay the craftsman back, Alexander constructed a beautiful house on the hills for the man to settle down. The craftsman accepted it only after knowing that the Empress herself sanctioned the gift.

Sir Alexander was so fond of the statue that he wrote in his will that it must be passed on generation to generation and mustn't be sold until and unless the family's reputation was at stake. The statue, now regarded as a family heirloom, was passed on to his great-great grandson Alex Heathcote who got into a financial crisis and decided to sell it.

Alex brought the statue to the Sotheby's auction. The head of the department was sure with a glance that it was the work of Pen Q. But later on, it was discovered that the statue was a fake copy of the original one. But the base which the craftsman had gifted so casually turned out to be a genuine piece of art. The narrator bought the statue for seven hundred and twenty guineas and an American gentleman bought the base for a whopping twenty-two thousand guineas.

There are five basic features of services. These features distinguish them from goods. The first is that services are intangible. They are experiential in nature. One cannot taste a doctor's treatment, or touch entertainment. One can only experience it. An important implication of this is that quality of the offer can often not be determined before consumption or before purchase. It is, therefore, important for the service providers that they consciously work on creating a desired service so that the customer undergoes a favourable experience. The second important characteristic of services is inconsistency. Since there is no standard tangible product, services have to be performed exclusively each time. Different customers have different demands and expectations. Service providers need to have an opportunity to alter their offer to closely meet the requirements of the customers. Another important characteristic of services is the simultaneous activity of production and consumption being performed. This makes the production and consumption of services inseparable. While we can manufacture a car today and sell it after, say, a month; this is often not possible with services that have to be consumed as and when they are produced. For example, the services of a teacher, doctor or lawyer. Service providers may design a substitute for the person by using appropriate technology but the interaction with the customer remains a key feature of services. Automated Teller Machines (ATMs) may replace the banking clerk for the front office activities like cash withdrawal and cheque deposit. But, at the same time, the presence of the customer, is required and his/her interaction with the process has to be managed. Services have little or no tangible components and, therefore, cannot be stored for a future use. That is, services are perishable and providers can, at best, store some associated goods but not the service itself. This means that the demand and supply needs to be managed as the service has to be performed as and when the customer asks for it. They cannot be performed earlier to be consumed at a later date. For example, a railway ticket can be stored but the railway journey will be experienced by a traveller only when the railways provide it.

Design has manifold applications and usages ranging from the most obvious or surface-level usages to the subtler and indirect usages that have far-reaching and deeper impact. The significance of design lies in its ability to fulfil these demands, whether aesthetic, teleological or semiotic. By aesthetics, it is broadly understood as its sensory and beauty values, i.e. concerned with the judgment of visual taste, here it is meant as the sensory appreciation of graphic design. While by functionality is meant the practical aspects of a given graphic design such as usability, communicability, readability and making an impact. Its efficiency lies in its ability to do so. Design has function as well as some purpose. In theoretical terms the ability of design to fulfil the function or purpose is called 'teleology' of design. Apart from the above two, there is one more aspect of design called 'content' or meaning of design that can be broadly called as semiotic value of design. A simple discussion might elaborate this case. Food has taste that caters to our taste buds which is a sensory quality of food. Sometimes the colour of food is attractive therefore we like it and probably other times we get attracted towards it because it is presented in an appealing manner. Aroma, taste and decoration or garnishing cater to our sensory expectations. Food also has nutritional value that is concerned with supplying energy to the body that helps in its overall physical growth and maintenance of general health and work efficiency and at times such food may not be visually attractive. This is the teleological significance. Now if the food is cooked by a mother, sister or wife, then it has a special meaning and a highly personal significance attached to it. It may not be very nutritious or properly garnished, still the food will have its own unique significance which is the semiotic value of the food.

By aesthetics, it is broadly understood as its sensory and beauty values, i.e. concerned with the judgment of visual taste, here it is meant as the sensory appreciation of graphic design. While by functionality is meant the practical aspects of a given graphic design such as usability, communicability, readability and making an impact. Its efficiency lies in its ability to do so. Design has function as well as some purpose. In theoretical terms the ability of design to fulfil the function or purpose is called 'teleology' of design. Apart from the above two, there is one more aspect of design called 'content' or meaning of design that can be broadly called as semiotic value of design. A simple discussion might elaborate this case. Food has taste that caters to our taste buds which is a sensory quality of food. Sometimes the colour of food is attractive therefore we like it and probably other times we get attracted towards it because it is presented in an appealing manner. Aroma, taste and decoration or garnishing cater to our sensory expectations. Food also has nutritional value that is concerned with supplying energy to the body that helps in its overall physical growth and maintenance of general health and work efficiency and at times such food may not be visually attractive. This is the teleological significance. Now if the food is cooked by a mother, sister or wife, then it has a special meaning and a highly personal significance attached to it. It may not be very nutritious or properly garnished, still the food will have its own unique significance which is the semiotic value of the food.
